

BISHOP FAVORS WOMEN SMOKING IF THEY LIKE IT

SHOULD WOMEN SMOKE? WHAT DO YOU THINK ABOUT IT?

Bishop Carpenter, a prominent English churchman in Boston, says that if women find pleasure in smoking, they should be permitted to do so. What do you think about it? A discussion of this question should prove interesting and instructive.

Write out your ideas, Mr. Mrs. and Miss Reader, and send them to the Editor of the Boston AMERICAN, Boston, Mass. The letters will be printed from day to day.

Bishop William Boyd-Carpenter, canon of Westminister, formerly of the diocese of Ripon and one of the most prominent churchmen of England, who is in Boston, declares that if a woman finds pleasure in smoking that pleasure should not be denied to her.

The distinguished bishop does not discuss the matter from a moral standpoint, but from a social and physical point of view. He says that if the frailer women find that smoking does not agree with their nerves they will quit it, just as men do when their smoking disagrees. This is what Bishop Carpenter says.

Same Right Men.

You ask me about the social evils in England, referring to the growing habit among a certain class of women in society, who smoke.

When women in England who are well thought of were asked to smoke upon the ethical part of this matter I do not intend to enter, but this much I will say: If it were not a pleasure to smoke, why should that pleasure be denied to the men and not to women?

There are many colors in the rainbow, so there are many tastes in people today. What may be a pleasure to the one may be a distaste to the other. Mind you, I am not discussing this matter from the moral standpoint, but solely from the point of view of a pleasure.

When we come to the question of this smoking, as they say, the more pleasure of that habit belongs to both sexes and to temperance.

When you come to consider the average, highly-sensitive nature of a woman, you might argue that smoking is a habit that is not healthy, but that such a habit in smoking would be permanently injurious to health, looks and temperament.

Habit Won't Be General.

When a man finds smoking disagreeable with him he will be likely to give it up. If the custom of smoking ever should become general among women, which I doubt very much, any woman will be willing to give it up when they find it disagreeable to her color and interfering with her health.

Smoking among women will never be a habit. There will be a few women who will do things above the ordinary that will provoke criticism, and there will be women who will retain their womanly traits and who will be the highest and noblest that there is in life and will not tolerate even smoking as a pleasure.

FIRST BOSTON SCHOOL DANCE ON SATURDAY

Dance, and show you, my children will be Boston's official dancing at the first public school dance ever given with the school's sanction to take place next Saturday evening at the Washington School, West End.

Right conservative Saturday night dance will follow.

Here and there who attend the Washington High or Elementary Evening School for the Commercial High School will attend with their parents, who will also dance.

Close among the scholars have been formed under the direction of the committee in charge of the dance, headed by Miss James J. Moore of No. 417 Boston street, Miss Francis A. Van Buren of No. 280 Popple street, Roslindale, a worker for the industrial arts at the West End, William W. Locke of the North End Civil Service House, Miss Mary W. White of the Elizabeth Peabody House and Miss M. J. Brennan, prominent in the West End social work.

Discusses Dances.

In discussing the dance, Mr. Freeman says:

The supervision committee's plan does not concern in any great degree the right or wrong of dancing. We have found a condition harmful and aim to correct it by the best means at hand.

The public school dance is intended to keep the girl and the boy from work all day and night have evening recreation. They find making the cheap dance hall. The public school dance will be given every Saturday night and there will be no more cheap three-pennies are welcome to come and to dance. We wish to make it a sort of neighborhood affair.

The dance will be carefully supervised, there will be no drinking, no teacher of dancing, and refreshments will be served. We will make three Saturday night gatherings and make it a pleasure to the girls and the boys.

We have asked the evening school boys and girls to come for the first time. A boy or girl who works hard all day and then comes to evening school at night has character. It is a desirable boy or girl for these public dance.

New England's Largest, Livest, Leading Men's Store

Filene's

With the sole purpose of making new friends for one of the most remarkable and valuable sections of this store, we have planned

Filene's

An Extraordinary Sale, Beginning Tomorrow, of FILENE "Machine-Made" Dresses (Trade-Mark Registered) for Women, Misses and Girls

The Filene "Machine-Made" Dress organization has been very successful in putting into little-price dresses not only excellent materials and careful workmanship, but good taste, becoming lines, artistic style and desirable colors. It has made great strides in placing within the reach of women who wish to spend little those qualities that every woman admires but finds difficult to obtain excepting at very high cost. It has met with ready recognition and each season the business has increased materially.

But to our mind the time has come to focus upon our "Machine-Made" Dress Shops the attention of literally thousands of women who do not now know them and their possibilities.

Every dress in this sale was made especially for this occasion.

Every yard of material is guaranteed. Every style is NEW—its attractiveness speaks for itself.

While we cannot promise such values as this the year round, yet the designing and manufacturing organization that made these dresses possible is at your service every day in the year in our "Machine-Made" Dress Shops. And, every day, this organization is producing dresses that are really wonderful, prices considered.

1893-1913

MILESTONES IN THE PROGRESS OF

Filene's "Machine-Made" Dresses

And the results of this progress, judged by values and styles, are shown in this "Machine-Made" Dress Sale.

Twenty years ago the wrapper was the favorite house garment for women. Today not one woman in a hundred wears a wrapper.

And the reason for this is "Style."

Twenty years ago the sale of wrappers was the principal business of Filene's, then a little shop of one lady and her assistant. It carried other lines besides wrappers, but these were the garments in which it specialized.

Hundreds of women will recall what good values were to be found in the little Filene store of a score of years ago. That was while we were specializing in price.

Later improvement took on a new turn. We began specializing in style, in always being first.

We introduced Filene's "Machine-Made" "Two-piece" Dresses (a separate skirt and waist).

This was an experiment.

We still carried wrappers, but we recommended "two-piece" dresses for style. They overcame the chief objection to wrappers. Soon we were selling two dresses to one wrapper.

But we did not rest here. Specialization still went on, suggesting new ideas to overcome old prejudices. Many women yet preferred the wrappers.

Then we evolved the "one-piece" dress. It combined all the good features of the "two-piece" dress and wrapper. It had style written all over it.

Here was a good place to rest.

But specialization never rests. The "one-piece" dress was nowhere near perfection. Every little while we found some new feature to add, some old feature to improve, and always there was present the manufacturing problem of using better fabric without increasing the selling price.

Other manufacturers, too, noticing the trend of demand, were thinking out new and better ideas. And the best of these ideas also found their way into the Filene "Machine-Made" Dresses.

We were striving for perfection.

Even now, we know, Filene's "Machine-Made" Dresses are not perfect, but only time can show us ways in which to improve them.

Meanwhile this sale reveals just how much twenty years of specialization have achieved in the production of not only house dresses but of inexpensive dresses for practically all purposes.

The Filene Machine-Made Dresses

Designed as carefully—fit as well—and have the same correct lines
as dressmaker-
made dresses

1. Designed by designers of the highest type dresses.
2. Materials bought from the mills in bulk, saving many cents on each dress.
3. Cut out with electric knives.
4. Made all by machine, even the sewing on of buttons.
5. Style and materials changed constantly, so that none can become common.

GOMMERY BALE had followed the crowd down Fifth Avenue after he had stolen the General's watch from across the street he had seen Fudge and the General talking. When he saw Fudge hold a coin up to look at it, then look at the card, he had hurried across the street and caught her by the shoulder.

"A gold piece, eh?" cried Gommery. "And who are you to have a gold piece all to your own? For it over, you little beg!"

"Oh, no—don't take it—it isn't mine!" cried Fudge, struggling to escape from the grip.

"Take yours, eh? You receive stolen goods. Hand it over, will you? Give it to me!"

Gommery raised his hand to strike her. "No, no, no!" she cried. "It belongs to the gentleman whose name is right on this file was very kind to me and he can't mean to keep it!"

Fudge looked him in the eye. "If you don't mind, I'll keep this card and find out if you are telling a lie. Do you hear that? So give me the gold piece!"

"No, no!" cried Fudge in despair.

Gommery used Force.

"Come—let me see!" I'll take it and do something desperate."

Fudge cried loudly for help. Several persons in the crowd stopped to watch the girl struggling with the man.

"Stop your screaming—stop, will you!" growled Gommery, slipping his hand over the girl's mouth.

At this moment Frank Wentworth broke through the ring and asked Fudge what was the matter. At the sight of him Gommery let go of her.

"Have me from him!" cried Fudge. "He is so big and strong!"

"Ah, yes, you will not," said Frank to Gommery.

"Well, as you said me so politely," replied Gommery, smiling, "I'm glad to see you strong enough to let me go."

The old woman told him you were better. And I hope she's been kinder to her darling, as I called her, than I am."

"It did not give it to your father, did it?" cried Fudge, looking at her with a pleading eye.

"Ah, yes, you will not," said Frank to Gommery.

"Well, as you said me so politely," replied Gommery, smiling, "I'm glad to see you strong enough to let me go."

"See, Fudge, I have her portrait here, a portrait of the lady I once hoped to call my wife"

"where you are to take the change," said Fudge, looking at the portrait.

"The train crossed the street, hand in last," said Fudge.

Frank had the gold piece changed in the street for Fudge. He took her to the thirty-fourth street entrance of the hotel.

"In the living aid, under well-dressed crowd, with retreating heads, Frank followed her to the door."

"What was the matter?" asked Fudge, looking at the portrait.

Don't Worry About Your Husband's Size

Examine His Forehead, His Back-head, His Chin, His Eyes, and Learn How Children Feel Toward Him

(Copyright, 1912, by Adventure-Journal-Examiners.)

A while ago two Chicago women issued solemn warnings against "small husbands."

Mrs. Anna Murphy, chief police matron of Chicago, reported as follows to the chief of police:

"Big men, whether it is in business or in matrimony, are easiest to get along with. They are more likely to be easy-going and less irritable and more generous. The little man is more likely to be nervous and fidgety."

"A man with a sharp, thin nose is apt to be a scold. Where a man of small stature is associated with a nasal organ of this sort, you have a bad combination. There you have a prize fault-finder. He will rail at everything, from the way the steak is cooked to the way his socks are darned."

Mrs. Marie Leavitt, collector of the Court of Domestic Relations, also talked unkindly of little husbands. She said:

"The small men greatly outnumber the big men in the cases that come before this court. Most of our cases are for non-support, and on this complaint the little, unskilled man is the worst offender by far."

We must inform Mesdames Murphy and Leavitt that if they knew more they would think differently, and we positively assure women engaged in selecting a first, second or third husband that the physical size of the husband is utterly unimportant.

A little, undersized man may be unable to support his wife. And a big, overgrown, heavy man also may be unable to support his wife. If a woman must marry a worthless man, let her by all means pick out a small one—a small man is easier to feed, easier to clothe—he is not as much trouble when he is ill as a big, whining, complaining man.

In the world's history the probability is that there have been more worthless big men than small men.

We are born with a certain amount of energy. When the energy goes into the brain, the body is apt to be smaller. When the energy goes to building up a big body, the brain is apt to be left inefficient.

Here are some very valuable rules which women may clip out and use ALWAYS when they are making up their minds about marrying a man:

First, look at the man's forehead. The ideas are born in the front of the head.

Then look at the man's back-head. The back of the head contains the driving power which realizes the ideas born just back of the forehead.

Then look at the man's chin. A good, strong chin indicates will power, strength to fight through the world and against other men.

Then look at the man's eyes; and, as far as you can, pick out a man whose eyes are light in color. A man with brown eyes or black eyes may be very affectionate and sentimental; he may make you happy. But he is not apt to become very great. We say it regretfully, because we know how sad brown-eyed men become when they hear it, but it is a fact that there is not one brown-eyed man included among the thousand greatest men that ever lived.

Be careful also to pick out a man whose eyes are not too close together. If the eyes are too close together, that may mean lack of generosity.

Be careful also not to select a man whose eyes are too wide apart—that means sometimes vagueness and lack of power to concentrate on the problems of life.

As regards the nose, remember that, on general principles, a big nose is better than a small one. With very few exceptions, the really great men had really great noses. The striking exception is Socrates, who had hardly any nose at all. But it may have been frozen off when he was walking barefooted on the battlefield in the snow, or his wife may have bitten it off. She was that kind of a wife.

Women, let nobody prejudice you against the thin, sharp-pointed nose which Mesdames Murphy and Leavitt denounce. A thin, sharp-pointed nose is apt to be a very successful nose; apt to bore its way to prosperity and take a wife along with it.

You want examples. There is Mr. Knox, Secretary of State. There is Mr. Hornblower, the great New York lawyer. Both of these men are small, each has a nose with a very sharp point—"ELFEN TÖVE THAT GYRED AND GIMBELED IN THE WAVE" was not more sharp-pointed in his nose than either of these two great lawyers.

We beg to tell Mrs. Murphy, of Chicago, that either of these lawyers, small and with sharp-pointed nose, could readily support fifty wives were it not that admirable devotion confines each of them to one.

As you study the man whom you have marked down for a husband don't forget to observe how children feel toward him. Children are rarely mistaken in their intuition. If a natural, unspoiled child looks upon a man with suspicion and keeps away from him, you may also be wise in keeping away from him.

Observe also how the man you think you like treats those that are under him by virtue of his superior authority, wealth or official position.

Foolish laws under which we live compel the wife to live more or less subordinate to her husband. If a man treats those under him brutally and arrogantly, he is apt to be more or less brutal and arrogant with his wife. And also, by the way, he is apt to be servile and humble with those above him. A man who makes others respect him regardless of their rank is also apt to respect those beneath him. Let women remember that.

It is a good idea to marry a big man, but it should be bigness or greatness of mind or heart, not bigness in bone and muscle.

In the old days—about five hundred thousand years ago—when the chief business of the husband was to kill bears, or crack the skull of the husband in the next cave, and bring him home for supper, size counted. But even then, probably the luckiest woman of the old days was married to some small, wiry, active carverman, with more brains than body, able to climb a tree and able to drop a stone on the head of the big idiot next door.

Napoleon was smaller in size than either of his two wives, but he made a very satisfactory husband, as far as success goes.

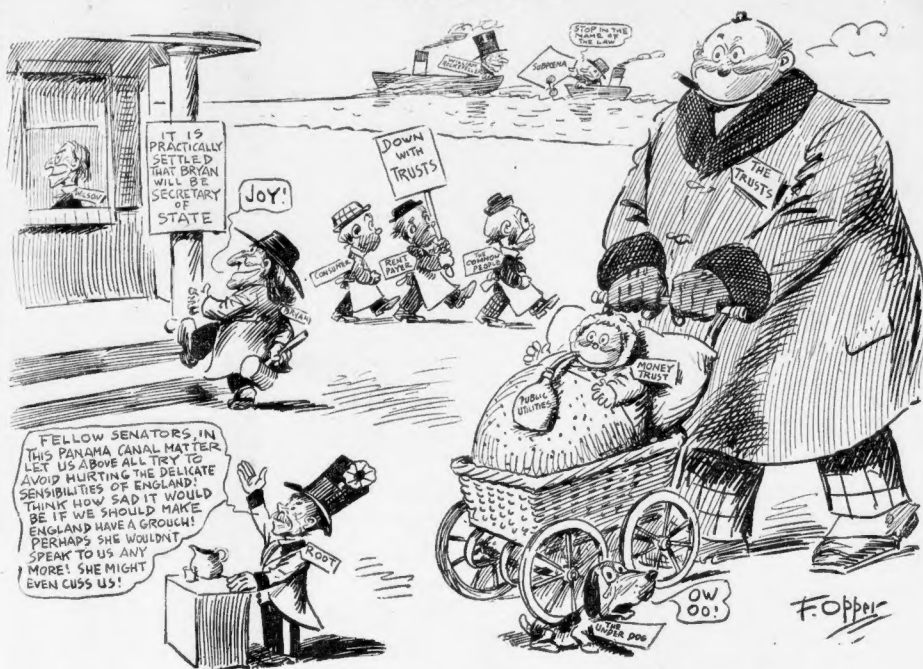

When a tall officer said to Napoleon, "Je suis plus grand que vous, mon Empereur," Napoleon replied, "Plus gros, imbécile."

You have to know French to understand the shade of meaning there, but it applies to Mrs. Murphy and Mrs. Leavitt all the same. You must be able to distinguish between greatness and grossness.

Yes, I'm very proud of this new kid of mine! He's got the biggest appetite I ever saw! My friend Morgan composed a lullaby for him; it goes like this:

"Oh, the little poppy-woppy, oh, the chickabiddy-chum!
He shall have some money-piecy and a great big sugar plum!
And he shall ridey-gidey in his coachy-poochey, too,
Around the parky-warky with a hooty-doodle doo!"

I'm sorry for that dog, but it's up to him to keep out of the way! That's a brilliant speech of yours, Elihu! Why don't you wind it up by moving to call this country the United States of Great Britain? Well, I see there's lots going on! My friend Bill Rockefeller is still beating it around to avoid subpoenas, and as for that mysterious gink, he seems to be awfully tickled over that notice he's reading! Poor Woodrow! He won't be happy till he gets an elegant thump from that mallet! Wow!

Mutto the Monk.

His Little Acrobatic Trick Costs Him the Change

Grossness is in the body, the muscles, the bones. Greatness is in the head.

Lastly, young ladies and old ladies selecting husbands, remember that every rule has its exceptions. A big front head is a good thing. But a man may have a small front head and still be a remarkable man.

The greatest musicians, excepting the very greatest—Beethoven and Wagner—had rather small, slanting foreheads. Music, you know, came before distinct speech. Animals and primitive men expressed their emotions in sound and harmony without the use of words. The highest part of the forehead, "the third convolution," is the shade of "speech." That may be undeveloped and the musical mind very highly developed.

A well developed back-head is usually the sign of the successful, energetic American business man. You see that highly developed back-head in Governor Wilson.

But a man may be lacking in the back-head development and still be extremely able.

A big, protruding chin, survival of the old days, when we used to use our teeth in fighting, is commonly a sign of the fighting instinct. But George Harvey has one of the smallest chins in all literature—yet he fights all the time, succeeds in everything, and, as the late Bishop Potter truly remarked, "Harvey has Karl Marx backed into a siding when it comes to making the rich and powerful divide his ill-gotten gains."

No rule is absolute, except one, and that is the rule of affection. If you really like a man, and if he really likes you, MARRY HIM, whether he is as big as the Cardiff giant or as bald as Pope, the poet; whether he have a head shaped like the earth—nothing matters if you really like the man you marry and if he really likes you. For the only important thing is the next generation, and the next generation depends first of all upon the affection of fathers and mothers.

A QUESTION

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"WHAT makes men fight?" the young boy asked.
His grandfather's eyes grew deep and washed
As the eyes of an old man sometimes will
When he dreams of Shiloh or Chancellorsville;
When he dreams of the days he marched so well,
And Antietam's gore, and Gettysburg hell.

The grandfather looked at a printed page
That told of cholera, thirst and rage—
That told of things with a ghastly hint,
Tales that the types shall never print;
The thirst, the hunger, the pitiful ALL,
Said the old man, letting the paper fall,
"You are only a baby, but tell me tonight
WHAT MAKES MEN FIGHT?"
